Our trusty and willing example vine standing like a silent sentry, soaking up life's energies quantified in soil moisture, nutrients, atmospheric gases, sunshine and visits from critters both above and below ground.

The pesky amaranth (pigweed) plant was removed, and our vine did get a light leaf thinning by machine. You can see the lighter-coloured secondary shoots growing back in, peeking out of the side of the canopy in random spots. We are in the late veraison stage, with berries softening, subtly changing colour and accumulating sugars.
